The Archbishop of Canterbury, Justin Welby, says he is looking forward to spending Remembrance weekend on a tour of Devon. The aim of the Come and See '23 weekend is to share the hope that Christian faith can bring. Archbishop Justin said, "I'm so looking forward to visiting Devon in November. It will be a great privilege to meet people from across the county, to pray with them and hear their stories. Over Remembrance weekend we will have the chance to give thanks together for those who have laid down their life for their country. I know that Jesus Christ brings hope, joy and the promise of new life. I'm delighted to support Devon's churches as they invite their communities to 'Come and See' what Christian faith is all about." Harvest Poem:

'An Answer'

Come, let us go into the lane, love mine,
And mark and gather what the Autumn grows:
The creamy elder mellowed into wine,
The russet hip that was the pink-white rose;
The amber woodbine into rubies turned,
The blackberry that was the bramble born;
Nor let the seeded clematis be spurned,
Nor pearls, that now are corals, of the thorn.
Look! what a lovely posy we have made
From the wild garden of the waning year.
So when, dear love, your summer is decayed,
Beauty more touching than is clustered here
Will linger in your life, and I shall cling Closely as now, nor ask if it be Spring.

by Alfred Austin (1835 – 1913)

Points of Prayer: As we celebrate Harvest, we pray for farmers in all parts of the world who have planted seeds and tendered crops and animals so that we might have good food to enjoy. We give thanks for those who are involved in the processing, transporting and selling of our food. We pray for the work of food banks who are providing food to those in need especially for the work of HITS. We pray for Isla Matthews and family as they prepare for Isla's baptism on Sunday 22nd October at St Andrew's Church, Ipplepen.

In Memory: Gerald Greet and Ivor Partridge.

On Sunday 1st October at 11am there will be the 'Harvest Holy Communion & Bellringers Service' at St Andrew's Church, Ipplepen. There will be activities for children.
